

Advanced Practice Providers (APPs) are well-placed to perform penile ultrasounds and can add great value to their practice by doing so.

Offering patients the option of a penile ultrasound as a diagnostic tool for penile trauma, Peyronie's disease, erectile dysfunction, and other conditions is a solid way to enhance a patient's experience and set oneself apart from other similar professionals. For information on performing a penile ultrasound, take a look at the latest article on the SMSNA website.
